

THE ODD SOCKS

A Compendium of Written and Spoken Words for
The Odd Sock Basket
on
Radio 2MCE-FM

THE BASKETEER ANTHEM

We're the Odd Sock Basketeers
We play music for your ears
You're gonna laugh so much
You'll have to dry your crutch
We're the Odd Sock Basketeers.

3 loud cheers for the Basketeers
Odd Socks Hooray!
Odd Socks Hooray!
Odd Socks Hooray!

THE SOCK MARKET REPORT

The Sockeranian Odd Sock Market has dropped to a high ankle overnight in all major sock exchanges but pulled up to the lower calf after heavy trading in hobnail boots in all major centers this morning. However stockings have drastically fallen and are dragging all other socks down. Marketeers don't expect them to pull up in the short term - it's a case of short shoe socks versus long boot socks.

Traders are sweating on their socks gaining elasticity in this volatile market. No wonder they have not put all their socks in one basket - there was no room due to voluminous trading in eggs. In fact most socketeers have been brought to their knees suffering a sockological trauma because of soft trading of blue ribbon socks. One sockiatrist was quoted as saying: "Illegal trading of blue ribbon odd socks stinks! These sockocious heels need to toe the line and be instep with honest socketeers such as Sockrates and Aristsockle."

One good sole mentioned that it's all due to the insockivity and oddsockivity of the market.

In international sock market trading, the OSX in most countries except Kasockstan, Sockholm Sweden, Vladivostsock and Mexsocko City are at calf length, however a Bull market in Banksock Thailand has risen to a high thigh, known as a Balls market by the Asian traders.

THE SOCK MARKET REPORT

Week 2 the Sockteenth of Socktober, the month of Lint

The OSX has shown a shrinkage of trading in ODD socks as many traders have got themselves into hot water, a common mistake by inexperienced socketeers, which causes irreversible reduction in trading socks. Many ODD socks have been lost, a disaster for the losers, however it has been a boon for those who picked up the remaining odd socks, as even shrunken socks have the uncanny ability to increase the size of the sockholder's portfolio basket.

Sockologists are at a loose end in trying to unravel the current mystery of disappearing socks - well, they shouldn't have unravelled them in the first place. Physockicists are saying this is irrefutable proof of the String Theory, as one minute the sock is there and the next minute it has disappeared, and all that is left is a wiggly piece of string. We should not poke a stick at this theory, unless it is a foot ruler, just for good measure, or you might be caught flat-footed, just like a sock which has been severely ironed flat. (Thinks: it must be easier for a flat-footed person to put on a severely flatted sock, as they are both flat. I will stop thinking now because my brain hurts.)

There have been some new products entering the Odd Sock Market. None have taken off, due to them being taken off shortly after they were put on. The throw-away sock, known as the resocklable sock, has been legging behind for the last week of trading. However the throwed-away socks have been picked up by socketeer fish farmers, specially breeders of sockquids, socktopus and sockallops. The one-legged sock has been trading at high levels for 1 1/2 consecutive days, but pulled up short of the knobbly knee. These socks have been sought after by prisoners of war who had a choice of having one leg severely amputated, that is chopped off, or of being exsockuted by the enemy. Silly soldiers, they should have asked to have their socks cut off by exsockution, not their legs!

Next week we will examine the Japanese OS Market in Sockhaido, famous for the Fish Stock Sock Market, not to be confused with the Fish Stock Market where, in fact, many odd socks have ended up in the Sockfin soup. Ah-sock-so and sayonara until then.

